

Young Authors' Conference

Organized and sponsored by local Catholic schools, Young Authors' Conference offers an exciting opportunity for families of students in kindergarten through sixth grade. Students and their parents can listen to a well-known children's author speak about her work, then enjoy some entertainment. In small group sessions, students share their own writing with other area Catholic school children while parents attend a presentation on encouraging young writers. At the end of the conference, each student will receive a small memento and certificate recognizing participation in the conference.

Please note that this is not a competition.

Louise Borden

Guest Author

Inspired by a grandmother who loved history, Louise Borden grew up fascinated by the stories of people's relationships to historical events. After studying history at Denison University, Borden worked as a teacher and became co-owner of a bookstore in her hometown of Cincinnati. When her children started school, Borden wrote her first book, Caps, Hats, Socks, and Mittens: A Book About the Four Seasons. Her parenting and teaching experience, as well as her love of history, influences many of her books. Learn more at LouiseBorden.com

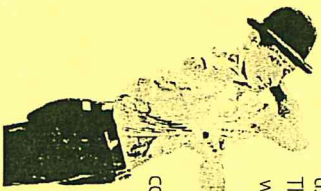

Entertainment

Writing Outside of the Box or Why a Frog's Favorite Cereal is Toadal

Storyteller/author Bob Kann leads a fast-paced session as he shows students how to tap their "subconscious" creativity and use ready-made structures to create stories.

Through improvisational storytelling, young writers will discover new abilities to identify subjects for stories, acquire skills for creatively developing stories, and learn strategies for confronting writer's block. Join the fun as Bob uses magic, juggling, and punishing puns to share his joy of language. Bob usually can be found reading his favorite book on levitation since he simply can't put it down!

Parent Presenter

Fostering a Love of Reading & Writing

Parent Presenter Pam Brown taught fourth grade, fifth grade, and middle school Social Studies and Religion after graduating from the University of Notre Dame and earning her Masters in Education from Providence College. In the fall semester she taught Children's Literature at Holy Cross College. She currently works with first and second grade CCD children who are preparing for their sacraments. Pam loves to read with her three children, ages 5, 7 and 9.
